

The Carer

Carers are the social glue of our society. Their altruistic nature is inspired by the desire to help others, to be of service, to care for and to comfort others in need. They don't welcome inconsiderate behaviour or those who cannot collaborate. They don't like being interrupted, disregarded and used. Make sure to consider their feelings and goals. Don't approach them with aggressive nonverbal signals. They are sensitive to them and won't contemplate helping you, when you're in need.

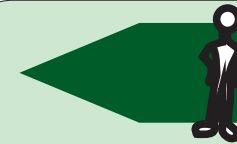

Gestures

As quiet and caring people, Carers often show affection through hugs and caring gestures (calming shoulder touch). They love to comfort others and create a bond through touch.

Open hand gestures show the wish to be seen as trustworthy and honest. Along with that, exposing palms are a sign for an open body language and a seeking cooperation.

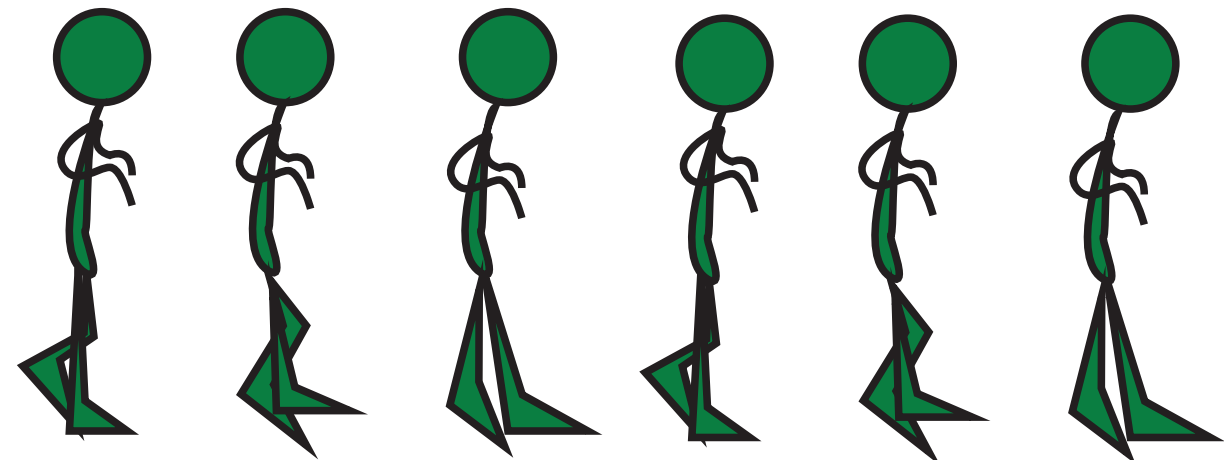

Posture

For showing affection, Carers will lean towards their communication partner. If they feel threatened with whom they are talking to, they will lean in the opposite direction.

Walk

Concerned about other people around them, Carers walk in a scurried way.
